The workshop aims at discussing recent approaches to Spanish connected history of the 19th and/or 20th century, thinking beyond national frontiers or even relativizing the meaning of these frontiers for the movement of ideas, people, enterprises and organizations. Due to the special geographical location of the Iberian Peninsula as a gateway to the African and European continents as well as its access to the Mediterranean Sea and the Atlantic Ocean, far-reaching connections and hybrid spaces have emerged on an economic, cultural, social and political level. The workshop aims to trace these connected processes, interactions and spaces to create an intensive, international exchange in which we discuss the additional value, challenges and desiderata of a connected Spanish history.
